Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform

19 March 2009

Dear Minister,

In accordance with section 175 of the Criminal Justice Act 2006, I have the honour of submitting to you the annual report of the Criminal Law Codification Advisory Committee for the year ended 31 December 2008.

This is the second Annual Report of the Advisory Committee. In 2008, we were primarily concerned with the implementation of our first work programme and, in particular, a pilot project to codify the Non-Fatal Offences against the Person Act 1997. I am pleased to say that a first draft of the non-fatal offences against the person part of the code was considered by the Advisory Committee in December 2008.

During 2008, the 22nd International Conference of the International Society for the Reform of Criminal Law, on the theme of "Codifying the Criminal Law: Modern Initiatives", which was held in Dublin Castle, was facilitated by the Advisory Committee. The conference, which took place against the backdrop of the criminal law codification project, attracted widespread interest and support from the Irish legal community and the various offices of State connected with Irish criminal law.

I would like to commend the contribution of the members of the Advisory Committee during the year and their continuing commitment to the project.

I would also like to express my appreciation and that of the Advisory Committee to Ms Valerie Fallon, Director of the Criminal Law Codification Secretariat, the other members of the Secretariat and the staff of your Department for their expertise and dedication.

We are also indebted to UCD for its continuing support and, in particular, the dedication and enthusiasm of the staff of the Research Support Unit in providing us with the research support required to enable us to fulfil our obligations under the Criminal Justice Act 2006.

We look forward to further developing our work on the code during 2009 and to reporting to you next year on the progress made.

Yours sincerely,

(Professor) Finbarr McAuley
Chairman

Introduction

The Criminal Law Codification Advisory Committee, which was established on 1 February 2007 under Part 14 of the Criminal Justice Act 2006, is the statutory body responsible for overseeing the development of a programme for the codification of the criminal law.

The Advisory Committee, which is chaired by Professor Finbarr McAuley, consists of representatives of the judiciary, the legal profession, legal academia, the Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform, the Office of the Attorney General and the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

The Advisory Committee is assisted in the discharge of its functions under the 2006 Act by the Criminal Law Codification Secretariat and the Criminal Law Codification Research Support Unit. The Secretariat is staffed by the Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform, and the Research Support Unit by the UCD School of Law. The codification project is funded by the Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform.

The then Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform, Mr Brian Lenihan T.D., approved the Advisory Committee's first work programme covering the period 2008 to 2009 in January 2008. The Advisory Committee is currently engaged in implementing this work programme.

Section 175 of the 2006 Act requires the Advisory Committee, no later than three months after the end of each calendar year, to submit to the Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform a report on the performance of its functions and activities during the preceding year.

This report is structured to provide information as follows:

- (i) Background to the codification project
- (ii) Statutory role of the Advisory Committee and codification structures
- (iii) Report of activities in 2008
- (iv) Appendices.

Background to the codification project

Purpose of the project

On 1 February 2007, the then Tánaiste and Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform, Mr Michael McDowell, T.D., commenced the criminal law codification project by establishing the Criminal Law Codification Advisory Committee. The role of the Advisory Committee is to oversee the development of a programme for the codification of the criminal law.

The criminal law of Ireland is housed in a multiplicity of statutes and court judgments. The main purpose of the codification project is to create a clear, accessible statement of the criminal law in a single instrument.

The advantages of codification for lawyers and citizens include:

- Improved access to the law
- Greater clarity in the statement of the rules and principles of the criminal law
- Enhanced understanding of the law
- Improved consistency in the application of the law.

Origins of the codification project and establishment of the Expert Group on the Codification of the Criminal Law

The Irish codification project has its origins in the Programme for Government 2002 to 2007 in which a commitment was made to codify the criminal law into a single Crimes Act. This commitment was in line with other Government initiatives to modernise and bring clarity and enhanced accessibility to the law (as for example the Better Regulation Initiative and the Statute Law Revision Programme).

There was a high level of awareness that the history of criminal law codification, particularly in other common law jurisdictions, tells a mixed story of success and failure. While codification has been achieved in many jurisdictions such as Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the USA, it has been less successful in others. Jurisdictions nearer home, such as England and Scotland, have not yet succeeded in establishing criminal codes. Consequently, it was clear that before embarking on a codification project, a necessary first step was to conduct a thorough examination of the feasibility of such a course of action.

Accordingly, an Expert Group was established in January 2003 to consider possible approaches to codification and to advise on the scope and extent of such approaches, in particular identifying any areas where the Group considered codification may give rise to policy difficulties. The Expert Group was chaired by Professor Finbarr McAuley and included criminal law representatives from the State apparatus, practice and legal academia.

In its report, Codifying the Criminal Law, published in November 2004, the Expert Group outlined the overall structure and style of a criminal code and recommended that codification be undertaken on a phased basis using the various tools of restatement, consolidation and law reform in developing and maintaining the code.

The Expert Group emphasised the need for a long-term commitment to the codification project and recommended the establishment of a statutory Criminal Law Codification Advisory Committee to oversee the implementation of a programme of phased codification.

The Expert Group also recommended that the Advisory Committee's role should not cease with the creation of the code but that it should also have a role in ensuring the ongoing maintenance of the code.

Design of the Criminal Code

The Expert Group recommended that the criminal code should consist of two parts. The first part, the General Part, should contain the general principles of criminal liability. The second part, the Special Part, should contain the core criminal law offences.

The Group, in recommending a phased approach, proposed that the first code instrument should consist of a General Part and a Special Part comprising the four categories of offences which have been modernised in relatively recent enactments. These are the Criminal Justice (Theft and Fraud Offences) Act 2001; the Non-Fatal Offences against the Person Act 1997; the Criminal Justice (Public Order) Act 1994 and the Criminal Damage Act 1991.

Statutory Role of the Advisory Committee and Structures

Statutory Role of the Advisory Committee

Section 168 of the Criminal Justice Act 2006 provides that the function of the Criminal Law Codification Advisory Committee is to oversee the development of a programme for the codification of the criminal law.

More specific functions of the Advisory Committee are:

- (a) to plan, monitor and review the implementation of a programme for the development of a criminal code (“the code”),
- (b) to advise and assist the Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform on consolidation of areas of criminal law for inclusion in the code,
- (c) to advise and assist the Minister in relation to the amendment and future maintenance of the code,
- (d) to undertake or commission, or collaborate or assist in, research projects relating to the codification of criminal law,
- (e) to consult, on any particular matter which the Committee considers relevant, persons qualified to give opinions thereon,
- (f) to monitor, review and advise and assist the Minister on international developments in the codification of criminal law in so far as they may be relevant to the development of the code,
- (g) to advise and assist the Minister on any other related issues, including issues submitted by the Minister to the Committee for consideration.

Approval of the Advisory Committee's First Programme of Work 2008 - 2009

Section 173 of the Criminal Justice Act 2006 provides that the Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform shall determine a programme of work to be undertaken by the Criminal Law Codification Advisory Committee, after consultation with the Advisory Committee.

The Advisory Committee recommended a draft first Programme of Work to the Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform in December 2007 to cover the period 2008 to 2009. The programme was approved by the then Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform, Mr Brian Lenihan T.D., on 24 January 2008.

Broadly speaking, the Work Programme describes the principal steps involved in unifying the sources of Irish criminal law in a comprehensive draft criminal code and outlines the salient features of the methodology to be employed in the codification process. The Programme was drawn up in light of the principal recommendations of the Expert Group on the Codification of the Criminal Law, following an extensive scoping exercise by the Research Support Unit.

As described in the Work Programme, the inaugural code instrument will consist of a General Part, covering the general principles of criminal liability, and the core of a Special Part, consisting of four chapters dealing, respectively, with non-fatal offences against the person, criminal damage offences, theft and fraud offences, and public order offences. The Advisory Committee will also consider the feasibility of including homicide offences in the Special Part of the first code instrument, in accordance with the then Minister's request in that respect.

The first Work Programme is set out in Appendix 1.

Pilot project to codify the Non-Fatal Offences against the Person Act 1997

In 2008, the work of the Advisory Committee focused on a pilot project to codify the Non-Fatal Offences against the Person Act 1997. This exercise is guided by the methodology set out in the Work Programme.

There are two parts to the exercise: firstly, the process of stripping out the non-substantive law from the 1997 Act and secondly, the application of the techniques of codification to the provisions of the Act, together with the development of a provisional offence template to be used throughout the measure.

In the course of its work on the pilot project, the Research Support Unit prepared research papers on the following issues:

- Structural issues
- Definitional issues
- Gender-neutral terminology
- Fault element terminology
- Element-specific language
- Superfluous language
- Lawful authority, etc.
- Limits to the defence of consent
- Ineffective consent
- De minimis infractions
- Strict liability
- Division of labour between the General Part and Special Part
- Adjectival law
- Incompleteness: defences (reasonable chastisement)
- Incompleteness: offences
- Non-core offences
- Misclassification of offences
- Overlapping/superfluous offences
- Codifying individual chapters of the Special Part.

The Advisory Committee adopted a number of provisional recommendations on foot of these research papers. Work then commenced on the production of a code-compliant set of offence provisions on non-fatal offences against the person.

The first draft of a fully code-compliant non-fatal offences against the person Part was submitted to the Advisory Committee for discussion at a special extended meeting held on 4-5 December 2008. It represents a detailed reformatting of the offence provisions contained in the 1997 Act according to the technique of codification as outlined in the research papers, and summarised in the provisional recommendations made by the Advisory Committee. At the December meeting, the Advisory Committee carried out a first comprehensive examination of the draft. The Advisory Committee will continue to work on developing the draft.

International Conference of the International Society for the Reform of Criminal Law

The Advisory Committee facilitated the arrangements for the 22nd International Conference of the International Society for the Reform of Criminal Law (ISRCL), held from 11 to 15 July 2008 in Dublin Castle. The ISRCL is an international, non-governmental association of judges, legislators, lawyers, academics and governmental officials who have come together to work actively on the administration of criminal justice, both in their own jurisdictions and internationally.

The theme of the 2008 conference was “Codifying the Criminal Law: Modern Initiatives”. The conference, which took place against the backdrop of the Irish criminal law codification project, attracted widespread interest and support from the Irish legal community and the various offices of State connected with Irish criminal law. Considerable publicity was given to the conference by the Irish press.

The proceedings were chaired by the Honourable Mr Justice John L Murray, Chief Justice of Ireland. The opening address was delivered by the President of Ireland, Mrs Mary McAleese. Mr Dermot Ahern T.D., Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform, hosted a State reception in Dublin Castle on the opening evening of the conference.

The programme for the conference was drawn up by an Irish-based Programme Committee, chaired by Professor Finbarr McAuley. The other members of the Programme Committee were as follows:

- Mr Conal Boyce, Solicitor, Criminal Law Committee, Law Society of Ireland
- Ms Valerie Fallon BL, Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform
- Mr Paul Gallagher SC, Attorney General of Ireland
- Mr James Hamilton, Director of Public Prosecutions
- Mr Justice Nicholas Kearns, Supreme Court of Ireland
- Ms Justice Catherine McGuinness, President of the Law Reform Commission

- Mr Mark H. Tuohey III, Attorney at Law, Vinson & Elkins, Washington DC.

The conference brought together delegates and speakers from Ireland, the UK, the US, Canada, Australia, South Africa and Europe. The conference examined the Irish codification initiative, differing approaches to codification in the common law tradition, the constitutional framework of codification, codifying the general principles of criminal liability and various defences and codifying the Special Part, with particular emphasis on homicide and sexual offences.

In addition, there was a mixture of plenary and workshop sessions on various topics, including terrorism and the criminal law, drugs legislation, sentencing, victims and witnesses in the criminal process, dangerous and persistent offenders, mental disorder and the criminal law, young offenders and the criminal liability of corporations.

Several members of the Advisory Committee presented papers at the conference:

- Professor Finbarr McAuley presented a paper on the Irish codification process in historical context at the opening session of the conference. He also participated in the round-table session on codification and the plenary session on specific offences.
- Dr Richard Humphreys presented a paper on “Drafting issues in gradual codification and the use of indicative headings”.
- Ms Lia O’Hegarty presented a paper on “The Constitutional and Human Rights Framework for Codification of the Criminal Law in Ireland”.

Other Irish participants included:

The Young Justice Professionals Symposium, which took place immediately before the conference, was also very successful. The symposium, chaired by Mr Justice Vivian Lavan and co-ordinated by Ms Rebecca Coen of the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions, focused on the criminal justice system and the chronically mentally ill offender in an international and interdisciplinary context.

Receptions for delegates were generously hosted by the Director of Public Prosecutions, the Law Society and the Bar Council.

Many of the conference papers are available to download from the ISRCL website www.isrcl.org.

Appointment of Bar Council representative to the Advisory Committee

The Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform appointed Mr Patrick MacEntee, SC, QC, who was nominated by the Bar Council, as a member of the Advisory Committee in June 2008.

Visit to Scottish Law Commission

A delegation comprising representatives of the Advisory Committee, Secretariat and the Research Support Unit met with representatives of the Scottish Law Commission on 25 February in Edinburgh. The meeting was attended by members of the Scottish Draft Criminal Code team, officials from the Scottish Executive, representatives of the Office of the Scottish Parliamentary Counsel and Sir Gerald Gordon, author of The Criminal Law of Scotland.

Presentation by Ms Joanne Klineberg, Department of Justice, Canada

Ms Joanne Klineberg, Department of Justice, Canada, visited the Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform from January to March 2008 as part of an exchange programme between the Department of Justice, Canada and the Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform. She gave a presentation on criminal law codification in Canada to the Advisory Committee at its meeting of 13 March 2008. Ms Klineberg also participated in, and contributed her expertise to, codification research meetings from January to March 2008.

Visit of Professor Paul Robinson

Professor Paul Robinson, the Colin S. Diver Distinguished Professor of Law at the University of Pennsylvania, who has been engaged in criminal code reform work for the past four decades as both a code drafter and as an academic critic of existing codes, visited Ireland in July 2008 to provide expertise and advice in relation to the Irish codification project. Professor Robinson also provided a written report on the work to date on the project.

During his visit, Professor Robinson also met with individual members of the Advisory Committee, Codification Secretariat and Research Support Unit to provide advice and information on the codification project and participated in the Advisory Committee's July 2008 meeting. He also participated in and gave three presentations at the 22nd Annual Conference of the International Society for the Reform of Criminal Law.

Interaction with the Law Reform Commission

The Advisory Committee wishes to acknowledge its indebtedness to the Law Reform Commission for its continuing support and expertise. Large areas of work undertaken by the Commission under its Second Programme of Law Reform and planned under its Third Programme of Law Reform 2008 - 2014 will feed into the criminal law codification project.

These areas include corporate manslaughter, homicide and unlawful killing, defences in the criminal law and inchoate offences. In addition, research projects under the Commission's Third Programme of Law Reform on aspects of criminal liability relevant to the General Part of the criminal code will complement the Advisory Committee's Work Programme.

Appendix 1: First Programme of Work 2008 – 2009

Introduction

- 1.01 Following the recommendation of the Expert Group on the Codification of the Criminal Law, the inaugural code instrument will consist of a General Part and the core of a Special Part.
- 1.02 Accordingly, the Code Team will produce a comprehensive set of provisions covering these areas in the form of a Draft Criminal Code Bill.

The General Part

- 1.03 In modern criminal codes the General Part deals with the principles of criminal liability and other matters of general application to all of the offences contained in the Special Part.
- 1.04 Accordingly, the design and drafting exercise in respect of the General Part will comprehend all or most of the following:

Preliminary and Ancillary Matters

- (a) Interpretation and purpose section
- (b) Dictionary and definitions
- (c) Use of explanatory notes
- (d) Use of illustrative examples
- (e) Temporal limitations on application of code: commencement date and delayed application provisions; transitional provisions
- (f) Scope of application of code to code offences and non-code offences
- (g) Amendment and maintenance

Elements of an Offence

- (a) General principles on distinction between physical and fault elements
- (b) Physical elements
- (c) Causation
- (d) Fault elements
- (e) Mistake of fact
- (f) Mistake of law
- (g) Strict liability

General Defences

- (a) Age
- (b) Sane automatism
- (c) Insanity and diminished responsibility
- (d) Intoxication

- (e) Duress
- (f) Necessity
- (g) Legitimate defence
- (h) Lawful authority
- (i) Entrapment

Complicity

Inchoate offences

- (a) Attempt
- (b) Incitement
- (c) Conspiracy

Corporate criminal responsibility

- (a) General principles
- (b) Physical elements
- (c) Fault elements
- (d) Defences

Proof of criminal responsibility

- (a) Legal burden of proof
- (b) Evidential burden of proof
- (c) Standard of proof
- (d) Averments

Geographical application

The Special Part

- 1.05 The Special Part of the code will eventually contain all of the principal offences in the criminal calendar.
- 1.06 The calendar of offences included in the Special Part will be subdivided into a series of discrete categories or chapters according to subject-matter.
- 1.07 Offence chapters will be ranked in terms of relative seriousness, as will the catalogue of offences included in each chapter.
- 1.08 Following the recommendation of the Expert Group on the Codification of the Criminal Law, the Special Part will be drafted and enacted on a phased basis.
- 1.09 The Expert Group also recommended that the Special Part of the inaugural code instrument should be confined to the catalogue of offences found in the recently enacted mini-codes, viz.,
  - the Criminal Damage Act 1991;
  - the Criminal Justice (Public Order) Act 1994;
  - the Non-Fatal Offences against the Person Act 1997;

- and the Criminal Justice (Theft and Fraud Offences) Act 2001.

1.10 Accordingly, the programme of work on the Special Part of the inaugural code instrument will consist of drafting four code chapters incorporating the contents of these statutes.

1.11 The remaining categories of offence will then be added to the code on a phased basis at a later stage in the codification project. In order to facilitate this process, the Code Team will design a draft scheme for the Special Part as a whole, indicating where the remaining categories of offence should be inserted.

Methodology

Introduction

- 2.01 In the nature of things, the Work Programme outlined in the preceding section will involve the application of the technique of codification to the body of law earmarked for inclusion in the criminal code. By way of explaining how the Work Programme will proceed, it may be useful to identify the salient features of the technique of codification.
- 2.02 In respect of the Criminal Code as a whole, the key objective will be to collect the substantive law of crime in a single instrument that is logically organised and easy to read. In the modern era this is normally done by dividing the criminal code into two parts, one dealing with the principles of criminal liability (the General Part), the other with the criminal calendar (the Special Part).

Codifying the General Part

- 2.03 As regards the General Part, the accent will be on restatement. The task will be to restate the common and (small corpus of) statute law rules and principles governing the ascription of criminal liability in a comprehensive body of law capable of systematic application to all of the offences included in the Special Part.
- 2.04 It is important to stress that the restatement exercise will not take place in a vacuum. It will be guided by one of the standard legislative models or schemes – the American Model Penal Code is perhaps the best known example - that have been developed for the express purpose of reducing the General Part to codified form.
- 2.05 Broadly speaking, these schemes or exemplars track the content and design of the General Part of modern common law criminal codes, and reflect the balance of opinion in the international literature on such matters as the optimum classification and sequencing of the elements of liability and the general defences. The most successful models place a premium on clarity of expression and logical organisation. They also make extensive use of drafting conventions and definitional templates designed to maximise ease of access and understanding for code users.
- 2.06 In the common law tradition, model schemes of this kind increasingly aim at completeness. The tendency is to articulate all of the liability rules needed to decide a criminal case within the compass of the General Part, as opposed to stating the general principles of criminal liability in outline form and leaving the courts to elaborate their meaning on a case-by-case basis.<sup>1</sup>

- 2.07 In summary, a key challenge for the Advisory Committee will be to select a legislative model for the General Part that suits Irish conditions; and then to reformat the liability rules developed at common law (and supplemented by statute) so that they can be restated within the framework provided by the model.

Codifying the Special Part

- 2.08 In the case of the Special Part, the emphasis will also be on restatement, albeit that the body of law requiring restatement has already been reduced to statutory form – in the shape of the four mini-codes that have been selected for inclusion in the inaugural Special Part.
- 2.09 By and large, these statutes have been drafted in an accessible modern idiom; and, as the Expert Group on the Codification of the Criminal Law has observed, when viewed as a whole exhibit a reasonable measure of conceptual consistency. But they are far from being code-compliant. The clarity and style of the drafting varies from one mini-code to the other. The templates used to define offences are not uniform. Offence definitions sometimes include liability rules that more properly belong in the General Part; as do the extensive provisions dealing with the use of defensive force contained in sections 18 to 20 of the Non-Fatal Offences against the Person Act 1997. Some offences have arguably been misclassified as between the mini-codes. And there is some evidence of seemingly overlapping or superfluous offences.
- 2.10 Moreover, in addition to the substantive law of crime in their respective domains, each of the four mini-codes contains significant if varying amounts of adjective law – dealing with evidence, procedure, and sentencing. This feature of the mini-codes tends to add clutter to offence definitions and thus to obscure the conduct rules contained in them, thereby compromising one of the key aims of codification.
- 2.11 In the result, the contents of the mini-codes will have to be reformatted before the restatement exercise proper can proceed.
- 2.12 Bearing in mind that the Special Part is designed to deal with the substantive law of crime, the adjective law mentioned in the preceding paragraph will have to be separated out and housed elsewhere, probably in a schedule at the back of the code instrument.

<sup>1</sup> The latter practice was followed by the legislature in the four mini-codes that will form the basis of the inaugural Special Part. Thus while most of the offences in the mini-codes require proof of fault in the form of intention or recklessness, these terms are not defined in the original legislation, either in the interpretation sections or in the body of the enactments. On the argument from completeness, they will have to be defined in the criminal code – in the General Part, given that they will apply across the entire spectrum of offences in the Special Part.

- 2.13 Similarly, given that one of the principal functions of the Special Part is to streamline the criminal calendar, it follows that the conduct rules in the mini-codes will have to be pruned of all irrelevant matter prior to restatement in the criminal code.
- 2.14 Moreover, given that conduct rules are primarily aimed at the public, the restatement exercise will have to be particularly attentive to the key codification values of simplicity, consistency, and structural uniformity. Offences will have to be defined in plain language and on the basis of a rigorous anti-scatter policy. The governing principle will be that, apart from terms of general application across the Special Part,<sup>2</sup> offences should be comprehensively defined as and where they appear in the criminal code.
- 2.15 Inevitably this will involve a departure from existing drafting and legislative practice, which relies extensively on the use of interpretation sections which have the effect of breaking up the definition of an offence by explaining certain key terms before the offence itself is introduced.
- 2.16 By parity of reasoning, offences will have to be structured according to a uniform template used throughout the Special Part. This template will be designed by the Code Team following a comprehensive survey of the four mini-codes.
- 2.17 Suffice it to say for present purposes that the template will aim at improved comprehension and ease of access for the ordinary citizen; and, accordingly, will specify such matters as:
- (i) the name of the offence;
  - (ii) the definition of the offence, using a standard definitional form of the type 'A person commits an offence if...[listing the elements of the offence];
  - (iii) the conditions under which a specific offence is not committed – 'A person does not commit an offence if...[etc]'; and
  - (iv) the meaning of key terms used to define the offence.
- 2.18 In summary, the codification of the Special Part will involve reformatting the offences in the mini-codes as self-contained conduct rules that have been shorn of extraneous matter and that can be read and understood without the need for an elaborate system of cross-reference to other parts of the code instrument.

Statutory Drafting and Codification

- 2.19 Finally, a word on the drafting exercise itself. Statutory drafting is a highly complex and specialised activity, and the Advisory Committee is fortunate in having considerable expertise in this area within its ranks.
- 2.20 As the codification process gets underway, the Advisory Committee also intends to consult widely within and beyond the State apparatus on various aspects of statutory drafting.
- 2.21 In the nature of things, the preparation of the Draft Code will require the close involvement of the Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform. In the final analysis, the Criminal Code will be produced in the form of a Draft Bill emanating from that Department. By the same token, as the measure will eventually be passed in the form of the Criminal Code Act, it goes without saying that it will have to go through the legislative process in the normal way. Hence the need for close cooperation with the Office of the Parliamentary Counsel as the draft measure is being developed.
- 2.22 However, as the foregoing discussion illustrates, codification and statute law drafting are not identical techniques. The technique of codification raises a host of drafting issues which appear to be unique to it, and which will need to be clearly understood by everyone involved in the making of the criminal code if the resultant instrument is to be worthy of that name.
- 2.23 The Advisory Committee will address this problem by producing a running commentary on its draft schemes as they are prepared. These schemes and accompanying commentaries will be circulated for comment to the relevant Government Departments and Offices and the wider legal community, and published on our website. They will also be tested in a series of seminars and public consultations which will take place over the lifetime of the current phase of the codification project.
- 2.24 By way of attracting international comment, initial drafts of the offence templates to be used in the Special Part will be presented to the 22nd Conference of the International Society for the Reform of the Criminal Law in Dublin in July 2008.
